ABSTRACT

A guide to vacation study-abroad opportunities is presented. About half the programs are sponsored by U.S. colleges and universities, the rest by foreign institutions and private and governmental groups. The courses, which range from a few days to 3 months in length, are appropriate for various postsecondary and professional levels, and a few programs (primarily sponsored by foreign institutions) also admit pre-college students. Entries include the name and address of the sponsoring school and brief information on the following points: year the program was established; program location; dates and/or duration of the program; pre-session orientation locales and procedures; enrollment restrictions; fields of study; academic level; credits awarded; prerequisites; teaching methods; language of instruction; housing; costs; scholarships; work/study opportunities; and program evaluation. Appendices include: a list of U.S. consortia that sponsor programs; a 10-page annotated bibliography of publications on higher education abroad listed by region and country; a list of foreign currency and the exchange-rate equivalency in U.S. dollars; and indexes of sponsoring institutions and fields of study. THIRTY-FIFTH EDITION

The Learning Traveler. Vol. II. Vacation Study Abroad (formerly Summer Study Abroad) is published each year by the Institute of International Education to answer inquiries about opportunities for study abroad during the late spring/summer/early fall. Most programs and courses offered by foreign universities and private institutions are essentially the same from one year to the next, although dates and prices may change. This booklet serves as a guide to summer programs abroad for 1985 as well as for 1984. Those interested in information about 1985 programs before the 1985 edition of Vacation Study Abroad becomes available can write for current information to the sponsoring institutions listed in this book.

The Communications Division of IIE would appreciate comments on any programs attended, including information and observations about the effectiveness of the language instruction and lectures, general academic standards, composition of the student body, organization, living and travel arrangements, etc. Write to Edwin Battle, Director, Communications Division, Institute of International Education, 809 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017.

ABOUT IIE

The Institute of International Education (IIE), a private nonprofit organization, is the oldest (founded 1919) and largest international educational agency in the United States. It has headquarters in New York City and a Washington, DC office; regional offices in Atlanta, Chicago, Denver, Houston, and San Francisco; and overseas offices in Zimbabwe (Harare), Hong Kong, Thailand (Bangkok), Indonesia (Jakarta), and Mexico (Mexico City).

IIE manages sponsored programs which assist 7,000 people each year through fellowships and grants. The Institute also conducts contribution-supported educational services, which include an information clearinghouse, student counseling, publications, and professional services to the campus study abroad adviser, foreign student adviser, and admissions officer. Contributions to the Institute are tax-deductible.

INTRODUCTION

This catalog contains programs of interest to the pre-college student who wants to improve foreign language skills before officially starting on a college career; the undergraduate fashion student who wants to spend time with the masters of Parisian couture at their studios; the teacher who wants to visit classrooms abroad; the researcher who wants a field-oriented course in tropical science; and anyone interested in broadening his or her educational experience by attending a study program abroad.

About half of the programs listed are sponsored by U.S. colleges and universities, the rest by foreign institutions and private and governmental organizations and agencies. All the courses are for students of college age and up. Courses may be as short as several days or as long as three months. A few of the programs, especially those sponsored by foreign institutions, also admit younger students, but there are no listings for programs exclusively for secondary-school students. There are some professional study opportunities abroad including specialized programs for teachers at all levels, lawyers, medical students, student teachers, and bilingual secretaries and businessmen. Read each entry carefully to be sure that the program is suitable for your educational or professional level.

The information was obtained from surveys conducted by the Institute of International Education in August 1983. The U.S. colleges and universities surveyed represent institutions listed in Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education. Programs and Candidates 1982–1983 (published by the American Council on Education for the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation). For the survey of foreign institutions and other sponsors, questionnaires were sent to sponsors whose programs were listed in the 1983 edition of Vacation Study Abroad, and to those that informed IIE of new programs during the past year.

The Institute of International Education is not in a position to evaluate study-abroad programs. Inclusion of a program in this booklet does not imply IIE approval or recommendation of it. Omission does not imply disapproval. The listing that follows is as nearly comprehensive as the editors could make it, but it is not possible to include all vacation study-abroad opportunities that might interest U.S. students.

It is the responsibility of prospective students to inquire into any programs that interest them. The student should realize that, in most cases, a foreign-sponsored, non-credit program at a specialized institution offers a planned but less structured and more independent experience abroad than does a program under the direction of a U.S. college or university. In a U.S. college-sponsored program, students can experience a new culture in a somewhat structured environment and often receive academic credit for their study abroad.

The Bibliography, beginning on page 168, includes lists of publications published by various embassies, consulates, and foreign tourist and information offices. Students should investigate the resources of these offices. Their personnel are familiar with the countries that they represent, and can often offer students suggestions and information that cannot be found in publications.

All programs are listed alphabetically by the region, country, and city in which they are held. U.S. college-sponsored programs and private- and foreign-sponsored programs are not separated; the name of the sponsor makes the type of sponsorship sufficiently clear. However, matters of academic credit, language of instruction, transportation, and other considerations differ markedly between U.S. college-sponsored and private- and foreign-sponsored ones. The following sections outline these distinctions.

U.S. College and University Programs

Entries include (if the information was provided) the name and address of the sponsoring institution; the name of the program; the year the program was established (in parentheses); the dates and/or duration of the program; facts on pre-program orientation sessions; enrollment restrictions if any; fields of study; academic level; credits; prerequisites; teaching methods; language of instruction; where courses are to be given if they are to be given by a foreign institution; brief information about housing; costs; a notation about the availability of scholarships; work/study opportunities; post-session program evaluation; application deadline; and where to send requests for application material. This book does not include programs to be held only during the academic year; these are listed in The Learning Traveler. Vol. I. U.S. College-Sponsored Programs Abroad: Academic Year, a companion volume to this book published annually by IIE (cost: U.S. $9.95, Overseas $14).

Many overseas programs are sponsored by consortia of U.S. institutions. Some are administered through central offices or separate organizations. Others are administered by participating schools; often they rotate the central responsibility from year to year. Consortia-sponsored programs offer certain benefits to their students. First, there is greater opportunity for a student to study in a geographic area where his or her home institution has no center or program. Also, the economic savings which result from several schools sharing facilities rather than administering individual centers are ultimately passed on to the programs' students. Consortia with large numbers of participating schools are listed, with their member institutions, on pages 166–167. Cosponsoring institutions of programs with about five or fewer cosponsors are listed in the individual entries. There is an index of all sponsoring institutions on pages 181–188.

The following general principles apply to U.S. college-sponsored programs:

◊ Pre-session orientation. This aspect of the program is more prevalent on U.S. college-sponsored programs than on those sponsored by foreign or private institutions. Pre-session orientation often begins several days before the group is to leave the United States, and it might continue for the first few days abroad. There is a surprising variation in orientation procedures. The sessions can be led by U.S. or foreign faculty members, former participants, the program's director, or any combination thereof. Most orientation sessions provide information on the history of the area to be visited and on the cultural differences between the foreign land and the United States, but some programs also offer language courses and may require preliminary readings.

◊ Academic credit. All of the U.S. colleges and universities listed award academic credit for the successful completion of the courses under their sponsorship. The number of credits that can be awarded are listed in each entry. However, the transfer of credit from one school to another is always the prerogative of the accepting (or rejecting) institution. The student who is already enrolled in the sponsoring institution should have no problem with credit. However, for those who want to receive credit for participating in a program sponsored by another school, it is essential to check whether your own school will accept the credit for transfer before enrolling in the course. Many schools have grade, field-of-study, and other restrictions on transfer of credits.

▷ Faculty. Instruction in most U.S. college-sponsored programs is provided either by faculty members of the home institution or by foreign faculty engaged especially for the program. If nothing is said in an entry about the type of instruction, you can generally assume this is the case. A few U.S. college-sponsored programs abroad offer instruction in foreign institutions. For such programs, the name of the foreign institution is given in the entry. In all cases, the U.S. sponsor arranges the program of instruction and awards credit for successful completion of it.

▷ Language of instruction. Language of instruction is identified in the entries if the information was provided.

▷ Fields of study. Brief information about fields of study offered is contained in each entry. It is important to obtain more detailed information from the program sponsor, not from IIE, before the application deadline. Most programs offer courses in the language and culture of the country where the program is held. Programs are also offered in other specific disciplines, e.g., art, educational methods, psychology, etc. There is an index to these specialized fields of study beginning on page 189. Space limitations have forced us to keep the fields of study index quite short; students may have to use their imagination when looking up such fields as folklore (it is under Mythology), television (look under Media), or bird-watching (under Leisure arts or Biology, depending on the primary focus of the program).

▷ Academic level. The entries include information about whether programs are open to freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors, and/or graduate students. Some programs are open to graduate students but do not award credit recognized by the sponsoring institution as an integral part of the graduate-degree program. Where this information was provided, it is noted in the entry. Graduate students often take undergraduate courses to fulfill a language requirement, as an optional course, or simply for personal enrichment. However, if you want to receive graduate credit for a course abroad, it is important to make certain that the credit offered will be accepted toward your graduate degree. Some programs are also open to pre-college students--usually students who have a high-school diploma and have already been accepted at a U.S. college. And an increasing number are open to interested adults, on a no-credit basis.

▷ Prerequisites. Academic and language prerequisites in addition to the required academic level are noted briefly in the entries. Program sponsors can provide more detailed information.

▷ Teaching methods. Sponsors were asked whether their programs were taught using lectures, seminars, science labs, language labs, or any variation thereof; many respondents noted that they required the student to do some independent study; sponsors of language programs indicated whether they used audio-visual methods, etc.

▷ Housing. Virtually all U.S. college- and university-sponsored programs arrange for housing for participants. The type of housing is noted briefly in the entries, if the information was provided.

▷ Travel. Some U.S. programs include a period of travel abroad, or some sort of program-related excursion, in addition to the period of resident study. Some do not offer group travel but provide for a brief period of independent travel before the group returns to the United States.

▷ Cost. When a single figure is given in the entry as the cost of a program, it includes round-trip transportation, tuition and fees, room and full board, and program-related travel. When the cost given excludes one or more of these items, the exclusion is noted in the entry. There is usually the same variation in tuition costs for in- and out-of-state students of state colleges and universities as there is for courses on the home campus.

Unless otherwise specified, costs given do not include personal expenses or independent travel. In today's fluctuating currency market, overseas expenses can change quickly. It is essential to check with the program sponsors for more specific information on what the costs quoted for the program cover, and what the student may expect to have to spend beyond these quoted costs.

◊ Work abroad. All the work opportunities are program related in the sense that the program sponsor places the student in the position. In general, work opportunities are either study-related, such as language tutoring assistants on the study-abroad program, such as clerical aides; or independent of the program, such as waiters. The positions usually are temporary and part time, pay minimal salaries (if any), and are not plentiful. Students should not expect very much help in cutting their expenses abroad through monies earned on one of these jobs.

◊ Post-session program evaluation. This aspect of the program is more prevalent on U.S. college-sponsored programs than on those sponsored by foreign institutions. Sponsors were asked whether they evaluated their program, how they evaluated it (student surveys, visits to program sites, outside evaluators, etc.), and, whether the evaluation was available to interested potential program participants. (Our surveys found that most programs are regularly evaluated, but it did not follow that these evaluations were available to potential participants.) If the program is evaluated and available, the entry will describe the evaluation methods and have the word "available" at the end of the sentence. If the program is evaluated but not available to outsiders, only a listing of methods will appear.

◊ Scholarships. The single word "scholarships" in an entry means that there are scholarships available for the program. In addition, some schools permit their own students who already hold regular scholarships to use them for their own schools' study-abroad programs. Students with scholarships should investigate these possibilities on their own campuses.

◊ Application deadlines. The deadlines given are for receipt of completed applications on the appropriate forms with necessary supportive material—grade transcripts, recommendations, and whatever else may be required, including a deposit. It is important to write to the sponsor for application material as early as possible. Sometimes late applications will be accepted. However, there is usually a limit to the number of students a program can accommodate, so apply early if you can. Some early deadlines will be past, unavoidably, by the time the book is published, but it can be used as a guide to next year's programs in many such cases. Some deadlines for scholarship applications are earlier than regular application deadlines; scholarship deadlines that are different from regular application deadlines are given in the entries if the information was provided.

Programs Sponsored by Private Organizations and Foreign Institutions

The entries include (if the information was provided) the name of the sponsor; the address to which to write for information; the name of the program; the year the program was established (in parentheses); the dates of the program; facts on any pre-session orientation; specialized field of study; minimum age or the age range, and the average age of the students; any eligibility requirements; type of instruction, teaching methods, and language of instruction; brief information about housing; costs; a notation indicating whether scholarships are available; work/study opportunities; post-session program evaluation; and application deadlines.

Most of the programs sponsored by foreign institutions offer instruction in the language and culture of the country. Language courses are usually divided into beginning, intermediate, and advanced sections. Courses for beginners, if they are designed especially for English-speaking students, may offer some instruction in English at the outset. Often, however, these courses are intended for students from all over the world, and instruction is given using audio-visual and object-recognition methods, using little or no English. Lectures are almost always given in the language of the country, even though the vocabulary and delivery may be simplified for the benefit of foreigners. Students with no command of the language at all may have some difficulty following lectures.

Many foreign-sponsored programs are held at foreign universities. European universities traditionally suspend their regular academic programs during the summer and allow their facilities to be used for special courses for foreigners and others. These programs are not their regular university courses. This book does identify programs, sponsored by U.S. and/or foreign private organizations, which have year-round sessions as well as summer sessions.

The following considerations should be noted:

- Credit. The U.S. academic credit system does not exist in most foreign countries. Foreign-sponsored and privately sponsored programs are not usually in a position to offer recognized U.S. academic credit (although some may do so through cosponsorship or special arrangements with U.S. institutions). Awarding U.S. academic credit is entirely the prerogative of accredited U.S. colleges and universities. In some cases, it may be possible for a student or teacher to arrange to receive credit for a course taken abroad by special arrangement with his or her own school. Some school systems award teachers in-service credit for taking approved courses abroad. However, all such arrangements must be made individually between the student and the credit-granting institution. Prospective students in these programs should investigate these possibilities and make definite arrangements before taking the course.

◊ Housing. Programs which provide housing for participants are so identified in the entries. Most programs which do not provide living facilities will provide a list of available housing when the student arrives to take the course. These lists usually cannot be supplied in advance. U.S. students should be aware that housing in a dormitory abroad, for example, may not be the same as dormitory housing in the United States. Single or double study bedrooms abroad are more like living arrangements on U.S. college campuses. Student hostels and pensions also function as dormitories.

◊ Cost. Relatively few foreign- and privately sponsored programs include transportation from the U.S. in their package costs. When a single figure is given after the word "Cost," the figure given includes tuition, room and full board, and program-related excursions. Exclusions are noted in the entries, if the information was provided. Some costs given are for tuition only. While the editors have attempted to elicit full information in the questionnaires, it was not always forthcoming. Check with the sponsor for full details about costs when you write for application materials.

The costs of foreign-sponsored programs are printed in the currency the sponsor requested. Because of the ups and downs of the international money market, many schools now require the student to pay in the currency of the country where the course is to be held. Thus many British schools will want to be paid in pounds, French schools in francs, etc. For the U.S. reader's convenience, we have included in Appendix C an equivalency table of currencies used in Vacation Study Abroad. The information is based on the foreign-currency-exchange rates quoted on Oct. 31, 1983. In today's fluctuating currency-exchange market, all of the rates are subject to change. It is important to check currency-exchange rates at the time you apply.

◊ Applications. If specific address information is not given in the entry, applications should be addressed as follows:

Director
Summer Course
Name of Sponsoring Institution
Name of City and State or Country

For French-speaking countries, substitute Cours de Vacances for "Summer Course"; for German-speaking countries, substitute Ferienkurse für Ausländer; for Italy, Corsi Internazionali per Stranieri; for Spanish-speaking countries, Curso de Verano para Extranjeros.

General Information

◊ Transportation. Where the sponsor does not make travel arrangements, course participants must make their own through local travel agents, airline offices, or shipping companies. Information on low-cost travel arrangements can also be obtained from the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE), 205 E. 42nd St., New York, N.Y. 10017. CIEE also makes travel arrangements for students and other budget travelers; for details write for CIEE's Student Travel Catalog (include $1.00 postage and handling).

The Institute of International Education does not make travel arrangements and does not provide transportation information.

◊ Scholarships. There are few scholarships for summer study abroad.

◊ Passports and Visas. An American citizen departing from the U.S. must in most cases carry a valid U.S. passport. Exceptions are made for travel to any U.S. territory, and for travel to Canada and most countries in Central and South America and the Caribbean. If foreign governments in the Western Hemisphere do not require a U.S. passport, they may require a tourist card or other documentary evidence of U.S. citizenship. A U.S. citizen may apply for a passport at any passport office located in Boston, Chicago, Honolulu, Houston, Los Angeles, Miami, New Orleans, New York City, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle, Stamford, or Washington, D.C.; to any Federal court clerk; a clerk of any State court of record; a judge or clerk of any probate court; or a postal clerk designated by the Postmaster General (only in certain areas). Students should check visa requirements and arrangements with individual program sponsors. U.S. colleges and universities and U.S. private sponsors usually make visa arrangements for the group participating in their programs, but students in foreign-sponsored programs may be expected to make their own visa arrangements. Information on visa requirements may be obtained from foreign consular representatives in the U.S. or from the Department of State publication Visa Requirements of Foreign Governments available in any passport office.

◊ Vaccinations and Immunizations. Foreign governments have their own immunization requirements. Current information is available from local or state health departments and foreign consulates or from the World Immunization Risk Chart (published by the International Association for Medical Assistance to Travelers (IAMAT), Suite 5620, Empire State Building, 350 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10001), which contains a list of the immunization requirements of countries worldwide. At the present time travelers to Europe do not require any innoculations.

- Student Identification Cards. The 1984 International Student Identity Card ($8.00), available from CIEE and at more than 350 campuses nationwide, entitles its holder to numerous price reductions in the United States and abroad; the student automatically receives overseas accident/sickness travel insurance.

- Further Information. The brief entries in this book do not include all the information a student will need before deciding whether to take a particular course. It is essential that anyone who is interested in a given program write directly to the sponsor, not to IIE. In writing to foreign sponsors, students are advised to enclose Postal Reply Coupons for an airmail reply.

WORLDWIDE

1 AFS International / Intercultural Programs, 313 E. 43rd St., New York, N.Y. 10017; Americans Abroad Summer Program. (1957). Fifteen hundred communities in fifty-five nations. APPENDIX A

Consortia

The following are large groups of U.S. institutions which cooperate in sponsoring programs. This is by no means a complete list of such cooperative arrangements. A number of programs are sponsored by two or three U.S. institutions. In these cases, sponsors are listed in the individual entries.

Many U.S. colleges and universities will give credit for successful completion of programs sponsored by foreign institutions or private organizations. The individual student should investigate these possibilities with his or her own school. The student who wishes to receive credit for any course conducted by any institution other than one in which he is enrolled should investigate his own school's credit requirements in advance.

There is an index of all sponsoring institutions beginning on page 181.

INDEX II: Fields of Study

The following index directs the reader to specialized fields as reported in the survey on which this book was based. The responses were necessarily brief (and, if not, the editors made them brief) and not necessarily uniform. It will repay the reader to pick out the countries in which he or she is interested and to read the individual entries.

Programs devoted to the study of the language, literature, history, or culture of the countries in which they are held are not indexed. They can be found in the main body of this booklet under geographical headings.

References are to program numbers, not page numbers.

BECOME A LEARNING TRAVELER

Further your exploration of the world of study abroad and international education through IIE's other books for U.S. nationals:

The Learning Traveler, Vol. I:
U.S. COLLEGE-SPONSORED PROGRAMS ABROAD: ACADEMIC YEAR
Gail A. Cohen, editor. Describes over 800 semester and academic-year study abroad programs, undergraduate and graduate, sponsored by U.S. colleges and universities in countries all over the world. Each description includes field of study, eligibility requirements, credits, teaching methods, costs, housing, and scholarship or work-study opportunities. Basic facts about study abroad, guidelines to choosing the right program, and a bibliography are included. About 180 pp. 1984. U.S. $9.95, Overseas $14. (ISBN 87206-151-5, ISSN 0196-6251)

The Learning Traveler, Vol. III:
TEACHING ABROAD
Barbara Cahn Connotillo, ed. Describes formal exchanges and sources of information and employment for U.S. teachers and educational administrators considering a teaching experience outside the United States. Information comes from both the U.S. and foreign governments, binational commissions, private organizations, and schools abroad of interest to U.S. nationals. 1984. U.S. $11.95, Overseas $16. (ISBN 87206-124-8)

Handbook on International Study for U.S. Nationals
STUDY IN THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS AREA
Janet Lowenstein and Mary Louise Taylor, editors. Describes the higher-education systems of 29 countries in South and Central America, Mexico, the Caribbean, the Bahamas, and Bermuda. Identifies 113 specific fields of study and the degrees offered for each by more than 600 institutions; gives information on scholarship and fellowship programs; non-university sponsored study and exchange programs, volunteer and trainee opportunities, and government regulations for study and employment in each of the countries. 230 pp. 1976. U.S. $9.95, paper; Overseas $14. U.S. $13.95, clothbound; Overseas $18. (ISBN 87206-080-2)

OPEN DOORS: 1982/83
Report on International Educational Exchange
Douglas R. Boyan, editor. Reports the numbers of college-level foreign students studying in the U.S. and U.S. students in college-sponsored academic-year programs abroad, based on annual surveys of U.S. institutions conducted by IIE. About 160 pp. 1984. U.S. $22.95, Overseas $27. (ISBN 87206-125-6, ISSN 0078-5172)
